THEY WERE SLAVES

The Sea Islands of the South Now in Possession of Negroes.

White Planters of Former Days Have Al lessness and Squalor of the Present Inhabitants.

There is no more delightful spot ong the whole Atlantic coast than the little fringe of islands that thickly embroider the line from Charleston to Savannah. Here the stately, picturesque palmetto flourishes in all its glory. Ferns of wondrous varieties and countless species thrive immensely in the elinvium of hollow and ravine. These sea islands cover a large terri tory. They lie very near together, separated only by narrow lagoons. Those lying between Savannah and Port Royal are not so large nor seem ingly so fertile as those between Port Royal and Charleston. The land here recuperates itself wonderfully from year to year, and produces the finest cotton and the highest priced in the world. The plant is rich and silken, being used only for the finest kind cotton goods, and when carefully gat ered brings fifty to sixty cents pe pound, and when carelessly gathere never less than twenty-five cent These are very high prices for cotton and the thrifty planter who owns from very well to do, but thrift is not one the shining characteristics of the islan ers, and anany of them are very poor in

In by-gone times, says the Philade phia Times, stately mansions, the home of planters, who were in their sma way feudal lords, dotted these islands But the families have almost disap peared, and most of the lordly man sions stand dismantled and ruined, wrecked and torn by the frequent storms that sweep with such pitiless fury at times over this charming spot. And in consequence negroes form the bulk of the population, and they are negroes of a very peculiar kind-of the true slave type of African, the unadulerated descendants of ancestors brought from the dark continent years ago, but still retaining their many orms of speech or lingo used by the half-cirilized ancestors.

They are also superstitious to an absurd degree. The devilish art of witchcraft is believed to be possessed by old crones who have lingered out their days to an incredible length of time. The holy dance, too, is practiced in all its wildest and most grotesque abandon. They are gentle, unobtrusive and friendly, patient and puncomplaining when storms come with little warning and turn the smilling paradisical field and gardens into windswept, wave-washed opens of desolations.

With the exception of here and there dismantled marsion the houses have all pretentions to architectural dismilarity. They are the one-room similarity. They are the one-room, primitive logisfians common through-put the south, overshadowed by luxuri-pus growths of trailing vines and masses of palmettos. Pigs, children and childrens swarm over the puncheon loots allke unrobulced, the children as mocent of conventional clothing as ing of the lower snimals, with whom they squabble for possession of stray bits of corn cake or other edibles.

It is a common sight to see a small pickening; wallowing in the soft white sand beneath the scorching rays of a tropical sun, totally devoid of clothing of any sort except a necklace of mole's feet, lizard's claws and cat's th, for the newborn babe may not have cotton cloth enough to be waddled in, but it will have in readipers this most necessary necklace as a preventive against spells of all sorts, cluding witchcraft, the evil eye or s goodoo of any sort. Then, too, the nole claws are supposed to impart ome beneficent influence, which causes the teeth of the infant to grow with but pain or danger to the babe. Frequently the ebony little cupids are dorned with a necklace, bracelets and inklets of these repulsive articles, and were it not for such articles of civilization as are always seen about a negro cabin one might well fancy one's self in the very heart of the wilds of the Bark continent. One meets very few white faces among the sea islanders. and, what is rarer still, a yellow or mulatto negro is not a very common tight, as in other places where the black race abounds.
